

Aaron Levin – Artist Bio

Aaron Levin is a performer, musician, writer, and curator. His primary focus surrounds the notion of discovery and its waning importance. This takes the form of creating environments, both digital and physical, that positively reinforce audiences while being exposed to new and unknown media.

Aaron Levin launched Weird Canada, a digital publisher, in March 2009 as an experiment in capturing, cultivating, and exposing the plethora of do-it-yourself music and art being created in Edmonton and Canada. Weird Canada has quickly become the leading authority on do-it-yourself music in Canada and has morphed into a collective of artists operating primarily in Edmonton.

Aaron Levin has continued writing, editing, and building environments that reinforce this notion of discovery within Weird Canada and its physical counterpart, Wyrld.

While not writing and programming, Aaron Levin composes music and tinkers with illustrative design, user interface, and user experience models.

Aaron Levin holds a Masters in Mathematics and Bachelors of Science in Engineering Physics. Contrary to popular belief, he actually is a scientist. He once played with a real lazer.
